Developing a Culture of Growth: Bringing out the Best in Camp Staff

Camp is undoubtedly a place where kids grow. Yet, we often overlook the capacity the camp environment has to develop staff. As young adults learn and grow, they perform better in their jobs and become independent as problem solvers and leaders at camp. Develop a "learning laboratory" that supports and encourages independent reflection and improvement as well as helps you give staff feedback throughout the summer. Create an environment where staff experience success – a phenomenon that supports staff management, retention and future organizational sustainability. Encourage staff to become their best selves and develop qualities to help them achieve their aspirations... all the while, helping you to provide the best camp experience for the youth and families that you serve.

KEYNOTE SPEAKER

Kenn L. Heller
Assistant Dean of Students, UCLA
Associate Director, UCLA Center for Student Programming

As the Assistant Dean of Students and Associate Director of UCLA's Center for Student Programming, Kenn has over 32 years of experience developing young people. Kenn has been involved in many facets of organizational life, both at UCLA and far beyond. As the Associate Director of UCLA's Center for Student Programming, Kenn has overseen the advisement of the over 850 registered campus organizations at UCLA. In his role as an advisor and mentor, he has successfully helped young adults better understand their roles as leaders and facilitators within their own organizations. He is also responsible for Risk Management Education and Development and Corporate Sponsorship activities for all student organizations.

Kenn is currently serving on the Board of Directors of the Boojum Institute and also previously provided consulting services for the organization, managing the search process for the current Executive Director. He served on the Board of Directors of Pacoima Beautiful for five years, an environmental justice organization based in the Northeast of San Fernando Valley and has also contributed to the success of UCLA UniCamp, both as a Board Member and in helping them to refine their strategic planning process.

Kenn is married, has two children and lives in North Hollywood, CA.
